INTRODUCTION

Among stupid and self-hating western white academics, the revisionary rehabilitation of the arch-villain we like to refer to as Genghis Monster (1162-1227) has, in recent years, taken on truly grotesque dimensions. Although the conquering Khan Klan’s expansionary method of mass murder and mass terror cannot and is not denied (just downplayed) by these collegiate crackpots -- modern students and gullible “intellectuals” are today instructed to ignore the oceans of spilled blood and shed tears; and focus mainly on the “progress” and “liberalism” which the monstrous Mongols brought to their subjugated lands.

Here’s an example, from the Amazon book description for Professor Jack Weatherford’s best-seller, Genghis Khan and the Making of the Modern World

“The Mongol army led by Genghis Khan subjugated more lands and people in twenty-five years than the Romans did in four hundred. In nearly every country the Mongols conquered, they brought an unprecedented rise in cultural communication, expanded trade, and a blossoming of civilization. Vastly more progressive than his European or Asian counterparts, Genghis Khan abolished torture, granted universal religious freedom, and smashed feudal systems of aristocratic privilege. From the story of his rise through the tribal culture to the explosion of civilization that the Mongol Empire unleashed, this brilliant work of revisionist history is nothing less than the epic story of how the modern world was made.

“Reads like the Iliad...Part travelogue, part epic narrative.” — Washington Post “It’s hard to think of anyone else who rose from such inauspicious beginnings to something so awesome, except maybe Jesus.”

Only a stereotypically anti-White / anti-Western professor of Anthropology from an American college (Macalester College in Minnesota) could vomit out such deceitful garbage apologizing for Khan. In decades and centuries past, Weatherford and his idiotic ilk would have been laughed at and ruined. But in today’s mad Marxist world of Fake News and Fake History, for such sanitization of Genghis Monster, Weatherford was instead puffed-up by the press and even awarded the Order of the Polar Star -- Mongolia’s highest national honor for foreigners, in 2006.

The purpose of this little illustrated booklet is not to provide a comprehensive historical account of the monster and his exploits; but rather a general overview / introduction to the subject. By refuting the pseudo-intellectual sewage now being pumped out by today’s Genghis-loving, western-hating academic clowns, this booklet will restore, in a basic sense, the proper historical view of this tyrannical beast.

Though Khan has been dead for nearly 800 years, the murderous mayhem which the Mongols unleashed upon helpless humanity -- in many cases, our white European and Central Asian Aryan ancestors -- was so atrocious that it, for both the sake of sound scholarship as well as historical decency, must never be forgotten, let alone misrepresented.
A DOUBLE STANDARD

Not that credence should be blindly placed in some of the discredited horror stories regarding Adolf Hitler and the big bad “Nazis,” but imagine a museum exhibit in a major American city honoring the German leader. How soon would the local Jewish community along with other assorted libtards and "anti-racists" converge upon the event and tear the building apart brick by brick?

Not that full credence should be placed in the official version of the Spanish Inquisition either, but imagine a museum exhibit in a major American city honoring King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella - the Monarchs who, in 1492, expelled the Jews from Spain. Same reaction as above.

Again, not that any credence should be placed in the official fairy tale version of the 9/11 terror attacks, but imagine a museum exhibit in a major American city honoring Osama Bin Laden and his merry band of box-cutter-wielding madmen.

Or how about an exhibit respectfully dedicated to the Crusades, the slave-holding leaders of the American Confederacy, the Ku Klux Klan, Joe Stalin, or Pol Pot? Unthinkable!
These famous "villains" would never get a sympathetic museum exhibit in their honor.

Even comparatively far less "controversial" figures such as Jesus Christ, Charlemagne, Christopher Columbus, Andrew Jackson, Robert E. Lee and Napoleon would somehow offend the delicate sensibilities of the oh-so-tolerant keepers of Western culture. But when it comes to the single greatest killer of White people (and Asians) the world has ever seen (pre-Bolshevik era) Philadelphia's Franklin Institute has no self-righteous moral compunction about sponsoring a traveling exhibit honoring - yes, honoring - Mr. Genghis Khan of Mongoldom.

Directly or indirectly, the Mongols were responsible for an estimated 40,000,000 deaths. (many White folks - Aryans of North India, Persia, Middle East, Eastern Europe - and also many Chinese)

From the Institute's own website:

Genghis Khan: Bringing the Legend to Life
"Uncover the amazing story of one of the world’s greatest leaders and most misunderstood conquerors, Genghis Khan. Learn how his empire forever changed the face of the world, and discover his legacy as both a ruthless warrior and a revered statesman."

Now, let's try that same promo for Hitler (we do not, in any manner, compare to Khan!)

Adolf Hitler: Bringing the Legend to Life

"Uncover the amazing story of one of the world’s greatest leaders and most misunderstood conquerors, Adolf Hitler. Learn how his empire forever changed the face of the world, and discover his legacy as both a ruthless warrior and a revered statesman."
See the double standard here? What ever happened to all that tommy-rot about "never again" and "we must never forget"? Before we continue, a crash course on Genghis Khan (1162-1267) – an adopted, ego-driven name meaning “Universal Ruler” -- and his family successors is in order here. Let’s begin this badly-needed “refresher course” on history’s greatest monster – a local barbarian thug who started out small, and then expanded his criminal enterprise outward from Mongolia.
THE BLOOD STORM COMES TO CHINA

For 30 years, starting about 1200, Genghis Khan (original name: “Temujin”) and his Mongolian horde would sweep through Asia and even into eastern Europe, slaughtering at least 10% of the people on Earth while conquering nearly the entire Eurasian landmass. His was the most violent and terrifying reign in all of human history.

Khan organized his armies on a system of 10: 10 men to a squad, 10 squads to a company, 10 companies to a regiment, and 10 regiments to a “Tumen,” a fearful force made up of 10,000 mounted men.

Because of their nomadic nature, the Mongols were able to breed unlimited numbers of horses. This is in contrast to smaller and settled civilizations which could not afford to sacrifice rich farmland for large horse-breeding pastures. Khan’s armored warriors wielded swords and lances. The light cavalry archers filled the remaining ranks of these extremely mobile and deadly armies. Already by 1209 the Mongols were on the move against China.

Using an extensive network of spies and scouts, Khan would pinpoint a weakness in opposing defenses and then attack the point with as many as 250,000 arrow-shooting cavalrymen at once. When attacking large walled cities, the Mongols used catapults and even diverted rivers to flood out the inhabitants. Most armies and cities crumbled under the overwhelming force. The usual massacres which followed further eliminated any thoughts of resisting Genghis Monster.

Mongols used catapults to batter city walls, and starvation to break down resistance. The terrifying massacres and tortures which followed further broke the captives’ spirit to resist.

In conquering Asia, the Mongols murdered untold millions – a human catastrophe of a magnitude never before experienced. About 1210, when the focus of the young “empire” was closer to the home base of what is modern-day Mongolia, the great ambition was to conquer the vast territory to the south (modern-day China) by attacking the Jin Empire. The Jin controlled 50 million people while the Mongols, at that time, only had one million. But brutality carried the day. The Mongols won.

Within three years, the horrible horde had reached Zhongdu (now Beijing). The city walls were 39 feet high and 18 miles around the city. So, instead of a frontal assault, the Mongols just starved Zhongdu out with a hunger siege. By summer 1215, the inhabitants were so hungry that many resorted to cannibalism. And when the Chinese finally surrendered, the Mongol marauders sacked, genocided and burned the city.

The massacre was ghastly. Months later, a passing traveler wrote: “the bones of the slaughtered formed white mountains and that the soil was still greasy with human fat.”

By the way, the legendary Great Wall of China was built to keep the Mongols (and others) from invading.

1. Khan’s killers came storming out of Mongolia. In time, the Mongol yoke of oppression would stretch from Korea to eastern Europe, from Siberia to India. /// 2. The Great Wall of China was built to keep out invaders. Parts of it were later built or reinforced specifically to counter the Mongol menace.
THE MONSTER MOVES WESTWARD

As you read the following edited & enhanced excerpt that is to come, keep in mind that the people who suffered at the hands of Khan were real people - our Indo-European ancestors - whose DNA we still carry. Visualize, if you can, the unimaginable terror that these gentle people must have felt as the mounted Mongol beasts and their various allies stormed into their villages and cities - torching their homes, exterminating the men, children and elderly; while riding off with the prettiest fair maidens. Such a sense of personal empathy (becoming rare in today’s world) is essential for fully appreciating the depths of Khan-Mongol evil.

Edited Excerpt From:

“The Christians (Vol. 7): A Glorious Disaster”

(Excerpt edited, enhanced & illustrated by M S King)
In England, the herring business had all but collapsed when buyers from the Baltic just never showed up. Why? It seemed that there suddenly were fewer people left in the Slavic lands to buy the catch -- wiped out, some reported, by hideous horsemen appearing like a whirlwind from the east. People with dogs’ heads? Well, maybe not that, but they certainly behaved like wild dogs. They usually left nothing alive, and in any case the stench of corpses made whole cities uninhabitable. Resistance seemed useless. The princes of the Slavic people, then known as the Rus (Russians), reportedly had assembled the greatest army in their history, but in a single battle these hard-riding devils wiped it out.

Kill - Rape - Plunder - Enslave
Beyond them and beyond the lands east of Persia, they left the storied cities of Samarkand and Bukhara in charred ruin. According to the works of the Iranian historian Rashid al-Din the Mongols killed more than 700,000 people in Merv and 1,000,000 in Nishapur. No one knew where they might strike next, and they claimed that their destiny was to rule the whole world.

These disasters are attributable to the evil genius of a single man, the tyrant Genghis Khan, who rejoiced in slaughter and commanded the killing of innocent men, women, and children as his mounted minions raped, pillaged, and plundered wherever they went. For centuries Genghis Khan would stand infamous as history’s most ruthless practitioner of genocide.

These Mongols were Asiatic, not Caucasian. They were also, as those in their path were about to discover to their grief, the world’s finest cavalry soldiers and by far the most brutal. By age twenty-eight, through an alliance with neighboring Turks, Khan had subjugated all the Mongol tribes. Then he turned on his Turkish allies, killed their leader, and subjugated them, too. He built loyalty through rewards of slaves and booty, plus endless promise of new horizons. In 1206 he declared himself supreme Khan (King).

Genghis ruled by extracting tribute and imposing taxes, troops on demand, and obedience to his laws.
He is reputed to have once declared: “The greatest pleasure is to vanquish your enemies and chase them before you, to rob them of their wealth and to see those dear to them bathed in tears, to ride their horses, and clasp to your bosom their wives and daughters.”

Kill the white men - Steal their women and make mixed Mongol babies. What a guy!

In one battle against Muslims, Khan's hordes descended on a city and hacked to pieces every man, woman, and child there. All except the governor, that is. He died in slow agony as molten silver was dripped into his eyes and ears. Mongol armies then converged on the great trading city of Samarkand. After Genghis’s horsemen annihilated 50,000-foot soldiers. The defending cavalrymen tried to switch sides, which left the city undefended. The citizens surrendered, and the Mongols took 100,000 of them as slaves. They then executed 30,000 prisoners.
Meanwhile, there was more horrifying news. Bukhara, 100 miles northwest, had fallen to a Mongol army commanded by Genghis himself. He had surprised the city, hacked its fleeing garrison to pieces, and burned the place to the ground.

Genghis then headed west, burning crops, razing cities, and slaughtering every human he encountered. He then dispatched 20,000 men on a mission to scout the rich lands to the west beyond the Caspian Sea. When confronted by a large force of Georgians, the Mongols fled with the Georgians pursuing them until their horses were exhausted – at which point the Mongols returned, mounted on the fresh steeds they had waiting for them, and massacred the entire Georgian army.

Riding out of the Caucasus, the Mongols tore a path westward. By 1222, their scouting army reached Hungary. They then lured an 80,000 strong Slavic force into a 250-mile chase. Then, at the river Kalka, the invaders suddenly turned, confronted the Slavs, and annihilated them. Slavic contingents coming up from behind were wiped out by Mongol archers hidden in clouds of dark smoke, making the battleground a black nightmare of slaughter.

By the time the prince of Kiev arrived with his army, half the original force of 80,000 lay dead. The horrified Kievans turned to flee but were butchered in their entirety. The prince was suffocated to death.
beneath the table on which the triumphant Mongols ate their victory banquet.

Mongols had no honor when it came to prisoners-of-war.

To Europeans, it did indeed seem that these heathen warriors would enslave every nation. Who could stop them? At the heart of their capability were the tribesmen themselves, toughened and disciplined from birth. They could ride for days without food or water. If necessary, they drank blood drawn from their horses’ leg veins.

The Mongols could outrace any foe. Their favorite tactic was to feign withdrawal, drawing the enemy past hidden flanks, then crush him from front and back. They created smoke and floods and by 1300 were using gunpowder cannons, incendiary grenades, and flaming bamboo rockets. All this was now directed toward the slaughter, enslavement, and subjugation of Europe.
Genghis Monster died in 1227. His son, Ogedei Khan and other family members picked-up right where papa left off. In 1236 Genghis’s grandson Batu, with an army 120,000 strong, set about finishing off the northernmost Islamic state, the Bulgar kingdom. In the summer of 1237, he overwhelmed the Bulgarian capital, Bulgar, exterminating its entire population of 50,000 and razing the place so completely that it was never rebuilt.

The once-powerful state of Kiev, where more than 200 years ago Prince Vladimir had introduced Christianity, had disintegrated into quarreling provinces. The northern trading center of Novgorod had declared independence and was growing rich. Princes fought perpetually with each other over succession and against the free citizens in the emerging cities.

Ryazan became the Mongols’ first target. Driving an outpost garrison back into the city, the invaders spent a week erecting a wooden palisade all around it to protect their archers and catapults. A three-day barrage of arrows and rocks followed, after which the attackers burst in with battering rams and began their slaughter.

Civilians were hacked to pieces with swords, pierced with arrows, flayed alive, impaled, drowned, or burned alive. The Mongols raped girls before murdering them and defiled nuns in churches while priests were forced to watch, and then were thrown into the fires. They torched the city but did allow a few people to run away and tell the rest of the Slavs what awaited them.

Kill - Rape - Plunder - Enslave

_Gentle Medieval White folks who looked like the ones depicted above were exterminated, raped or enslaved by the MILLIONS!_

As the Mongols burned a bloody path northward, the Grand Duke of Suzdal traveled the country gathering armies to defend his capital of Vladimir. The Mongols destroyed his city before he got home, then confronted his army by the river Sit, surrounded it, and annihilated it.

Now short of supplies, the invaders summered on the grassy plains west of the Don, where they received fresh herds of horses from Mongolia. Through the following winter, they annihilated or enslaved nomadic peoples as far south as the Crimea.

In autumn 1239 they went north and destroyed Chernigov. Then, they spent the winter on the Kipchak steppes but used the time to reconnoiter Kiev, still the largest and most magnificent city in all the Slavic territories.

In December 1240 they struck. Their army battered down the walls, then sliced its way through defenders atop the rubble. The carnage was merciless, and in a horrific conclusion, the weight of people crowding inside the cathedral collapsed its walls. All that remained of the once-splendid metropolis was a hideous pile of writhing and crushed humanity; six years later travelers found Kiev’s streets still filled with skulls and other bones. The Rus were close to being vanquished in a stroke.

The siege and slaughter of Russian Kiev
*Editor's Note re: Khazars -- About this time, the Mongols made common cause with the Jews of Khazaria. Centuries earlier - before the Christian Rus warriors finally put the converted Khazar Hun Empire "out of business" - the Khazar Jews had conquered Hungary and Poland. Israeli scholar Sophia Menache's 2008 paper, entitled: Tartars, Jews, Saracens and the Jewish-Mongol ‘Plot’ of 1241. explores this relationship.

The Jewish Khazar Empire was a Turko-Hun entity; and Turkics are the "cousins" of Mongols. Old Khazaria was indeed referred to as a "Khanate" (political entity ruled by a "Khan"). This is why derivatives of the word "Khan" (King) is a common Jewish surname - - Kahn, Cowen, Kagan, Kaganovich etc. That dispersed Khazars and Mongols would vindictively cooperate in exterminating and enslaving the White Christians of Slavic-Rus Europe is not surprising.

The Mongol army, like a hurricane gathering momentum, had grown bigger because of thousands of conscripts - (*surely including many Khazar Jews). Batu assigned 30,000 troops to hold the Rus while he led another 100,000 across an astounding 600-mile front. His target was Hungary, ruled by King Bela IV from Buda.

Neighboring rulers ignored Bela's plight. Only after Batu annihilated Carpathian defenders did Hungary assemble an army. Bearing down on them through the mountain snows at an amazing 60 miles per day, the Mongols arrived at Vac, slaughtered everyone there, and set up camp.

Nevertheless, Bela's remaining army of 100,000 was still the largest in Europe, and when Batu failed to attack immediately, Bela grew confident. Then, Mongol reinforcements arrived from the south and he watched in amazement as the invading army began a slow departure. They were giving up, thought the king; they must be afraid or in trouble. And so, disastrously, he chased them.

At Mohi, about eighty miles east of Pest, the Mongols sprang their trap. Surrounding the Hungarians, they unleashed a barrage of firebombs and arrows. When a gap finally appeared in the encircling horde and the Hungarians raced through it to escape, they found themselves trapped in a gorge where archers annihilated 60,000 of them.

By then all Europe had been further frightened by news of more mayhem to the north, where the northern wing of the Mongol army had destroyed the Polish cities of Lublin and Zawichost, sacked Sandomierz, and plundered a monastery.

In Krakow and Wroclaw terrified residents actually burned their own cities and fled. Finally, at Legnica the rampaging horsemen had met an army of 25,000 that included Templars, Teutonic Knights, the entire Polish aristocracy, and the full flower of northern chivalry. But even this assemblage was obliterated in short order.

Waves of panic now rippled all the way to the Atlantic. In cathedrals people prayed, “From the fury of the Tatars, O Lord, deliver us.” The pope called for a crusade against the Mongols in Germany. Bela, in exile, sent money to build forts on the west side of the Danube.

Months went by with no move from Batu. Then, on Christmas Day 1241, the Mongols exploded with fury against Buda and against Gran, 30 miles northwest. There they roasted citizens alive to make them reveal the locations of hidden treasure, before riding toward Vienna, about seventy miles away. The invasion of Austria had begun. Mongol troops were spotted as far away as Zagreb, east of the Adriatic. Panic also spread in Italy when some were spotted near Venice.

All Europe lay helpless before them. (By the way, In the far east, in centuries to come, the Mongols will inflict similar horror, genocide and cultural destruction upon Aryan India.) It would require the combined might of every army in Christendom to stop these horsemen, but such a unified force simply did not exist. Then, amazingly, the Mongols vanished.

What the Europeans did not know was that Ogedei Khan (son of Genghis) had died of a sudden convulsion. His death had saved Europe, because Batu had to go to Karakorum, where the succession would be contested. However, the dread fear remained, of course; these ghastly marauders would surely return, spelling the doom of Christendom.

The death of Ogedei saved western Europe and caused internal dissension among the Mongols.
There were some who took a different view of the Mongols, regarding them not as vanquishers of Christendom but as an instrument by which Christianity could actually overcome Islamic invasion. (Everybody was out to rob and enslave White Europe!) When Pope Innocent IV became pope in 1243, his chief question about the Mongols was, could they be converted and used to fight the Muslims?

Seeking answers, in 1245 he dispatched to them a diplomatic embassy led by a Franciscan monk called John of Plano Carpini. After a historic three-year adventure, his small party returned as heroes, the first Europeans to have visited the Far East. Unfortunately, the message he brought from Genghis Khan was a humiliating rebuff. Christendom had just two choices, the Mongols declared: submit or perish.

If the Mongols had had the chance, they would have destroyed Rome and Florence as they devastated Kiev and Baghdad, and there could never have been a Renaissance based on Christian culture.
The terror-filled population of Western Europe dreaded the final Mongol push - which, thankfully, never came. What would the world have been like if the Mongols had completed the dream of Genghis Khan?

By 1256, the Mongol leader Hulagu had assembled a force of 100,000. His first objective was to destroy the independent sect called the Assassins in their mountain fortresses near the Caspian Sea. More than 100 Assassin castles crumbled over the next year, pounded by a thousand crews of Chinese catapult bombers. Every inhabitant, including women and children, was slaughtered.
In 1260 the Mongols butchered 49 Dominican monks in the Polish city of Sandomierz. This took place during the second Mongol invasion of Poland, which followed 19 years after the first (1240/1241).

The Mongols rolled toward Baghdad, on the Tigris River, and drowned defending soldiers by the 1000's by breaking a dike. Bursting through Baghdad’s walls, they unleashed one of the bloodiest single-city massacres in human history. It began after remaining troops voluntarily disarmed, expecting to be conscripted, but instead were marched out of the city and butchered. Then, the Mongols killed 500,000 surrendering civilians.

The Mongols burned Baghdad, then had the Caliph sewn up in a carpet and trampled to death by horses.
Muslim historians put the total killed as high as 2,000,000.

In Russia, Alexander Nevsky was the first prince to become the Mongols’ servant. He knew that his people were too weak to expel the Mongols. Thus, he gave them the chance to survive by gaining the confidence of their overlords. About the mid-14th century the Russians would finally shake off the “Tatar-Mongol yoke.”

1- Prince Alexander Nevsky bought time for Russia - paying the Mongols their taxes as Russia patiently waited for the Mongols to weaken internally. 2- The vast Mongol crime-Empire eventually shrunk all the way back to what is modern day Mongolia.

 END OF EDITED EXCERPT ***
THE NISHAPUR MEGA-MASSACRE

Deep breath.

Ready for some more depressing dirt about modern western academia’s recently-rehabilitated “great man?” Let’s review, in more detail, the previously mentioned mega-massacre in the Persian city of Nishapur (1221) – where legend/oral tradition has it that the mad Mongols murdered 1.7 million human beings in a single hour.

In Nishapur (northeastern Iran), Genghis Monster’s favorite son-in-law, Toquchar, was killed by a defender’s arrow. This proved to be the death warrant for every single white Aryan inhabitant. Khan's daughter, outraged at the news of her husband's death, demanded that every person in Nishapur be killed. Daddy’s little girl was granted her wicked wish.

Khan’s youngest son, Tolui, led the hordes in this ghastly task. Women, children, babies, and even dogs and cats were all murdered. Worried that some of the Nishapurans were wounded but still alive, Khan's daughter asked that all victims be beheaded and their skulls stacked into pyramids. Again, her wish was granted.

It is said that 1.7 million Nishapurans were slain. Exactly how many died during the siege and subsequent mega-massacre is questionable. But an astonishing number of innocent non-combatants and animals were indeed killed and beheaded in a very short amount of time – all because the sick and twisted daughter of an equally sick and twisted father wanted to avenge the justified killing of Khan’s sick and twisted son-in-law.

\[ x 25 \]

Nishapur: The equivalent of 25 football stadiums full of white people – with every man, woman and child (plus animals) in them slaughtered in just one day (some say, one hour!) // 2. Mongols made pyramids of severed heads.
KHAN THE SEX-CRAZED BREEDER

Khan’s sexual appetite was as insatiable as his lusts for blood and power. Due to his far-reaching travels and unlimited access to sex slaves, a 2003 study estimated that about 16 million people alive today - or about 0.5 percent of the global population -- are descendants of Khan [source: Zerjal, et al.].

The total number of Mongol descendants in the areas which they once controlled may run into the hundreds of millions. Factor in all the eastern European and central Asian White women taken as wives / sex slaves by Khan’s conquering hordes; and you’ll understand why so many fair-skinned Eastern Europeans, upon closer inspection, appear to have a bit of an oriental look to them. As an old French saying goes: “Scratch a Russian and you’ll find a Tatar (Asiatic Mongol allies).” And had not Khan died so unexpectedly; the Medieval Mongolization would surely have happened to Western Europe as well. There would have been no European Empires and no discovery of the Americas.
The subtle traces of Asiatic features observable in many Russians and Eastern Europeans of today are the result of Mongol / Tatar occupation – and their desire for white women.

KHAN THE DESTROYER OF CULTURE

In addition to wiping out huge chunks of humanity, Khan’s horrible hordes deprived future generations of access to high culture, art, history and learning. The looting and destruction of libraries and places of higher learning was great fun for Khan’s killers.

The worst case happened in Baghdad in 1258 (in modern day Iraq). After the barbaric butchers had depopulated the historic city – the Mongols, under Genghis’ son, Obedai, looted and then destroyed... mosques, palaces, libraries, and hospitals. Priceless books from Baghdad's thirty-six public libraries were ripped apart. The ignorant looters then fashioned sandals for themselves out of the leather covers.

Grand buildings which had taken decades to construct were burned to the ground. The House of Wisdom (Grand Library of Baghdad), which housed countless precious historical books and documents about medicine, philosophy and astronomy were destroyed. It was said that the Baghdad’s famed Tigris River ran black with ink from the thousands of books thrown into the river; and red from the blood of the scientists and philosophers murdered.

1. The House of Wisdom was destroyed – its precious contents dumped into the river.
2. The Mongol siege of Baghdad

To bring the scope of the madness of the Satanic Khan Klan, closer to the imagination of western readers, let us engage in a little “thought experiment.” Imagine if you will, a center of high culture such as Paris, or Rome, or Florence, or London being sacked by these demented dogs of hell. Imagine the majority of their populations being put to death. Imagine the contents of the great museums and libraries of these cities being dumped into the rivers Seine, Tiber, Arno and Thames respectively. Imagine the Cathedral de Notre Dame and the Tower of Pisa destroyed.

Imagine René Descartes, Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo, William Shakespeare, Isaac Newton and other great men of state, learning, art and discovery rounded up, their throats slit, their womenfolk abducted, and their lifeless tortured bodies flung into those same rivers – just for the fun of it. Well, that’s exactly what took place at the important centers of commerce and high culture throughout predominantly (though not exclusively) white / Aryan central Asia.

What the uncultured Mongols did to the scholars of Baghdad would be akin to slaughtering da Vinci, Shakespeare and Newton.
MORE FUN FACTS ABOUT THE MONSTER

• At 14, Temujin (Khan’s birth name) became head of the household after stalking and murdering his older half-brother, Behter, with a bow and arrow.

• In 1223, the conquering Mongols once enjoyed a victory feast on top of the still-living generals and nobility of the Russian army. The Russians were forced to lie down on the ground. A heavy wooden gate was thrown on top of them and chairs and tables were set on top of it. As the Mongols sat down to eat and drink, the Russians were slowly crushed to death beneath them.

• Near the very end of his life, 1227, Khan nearly erased the of the entire kingdom of Xi Xia from known history. He had asked the conquered kingdom to send him troops. When Xi Xia refused, the Mongols swarmed in and exterminated every member of the population. Because they hadn’t written down their history, the only record of Xi Xia’s existence came from neighboring countries. It wasn’t until the 20th century that archaeologists unearthed stones with their writing on them. Before that, every word they had spoken was forgotten.

* Some believe that Khan was killed during the fighting at Xi Xia, and that the order to wipe out the Kingdom was issued from his death bed.

- Genghis Khan had willed that he wanted to be buried where no one could find his corpse. Slaves, guarded by warriors, buried him in an obscure location. To make sure that they would never divulge the secret, the warriors massacred them after the burial. When the warriors returned to camp, they too were promptly slaughtered. Khan’s tomb has never been found.
CONCLUSION

There is so much more to tell – and historians of not too long ago, and of many varying cultures, have already done so. But for purposes of this crash-course pamphlet, we have covered all that an inquiring mind really needs to know about the wonderful Mr. Khan and his uncultured, brutish bloodline-successors who came very close to annihilating Western Civilization.

Genghis Monster was neither an empire-builder nor a statesman. In modern urban vernacular, Khan was a straight-up “gangsta” who started out with a relatively small army of thugs and then, through organized terror and force, recruited or coerced more and more men into his cross-continental killing machine.

The godless Mongols brought neither learning, nor science, nor art, nor culture, nor architecture, nor invention, nor philosophy, and nor moral codes to the hapless peoples who were forced to submit to their rule. All they brought was death, terror, sexual slavery, forced military conscription, forced mongrelizing, and taxes.

Had it not been for the tenacity of the Germans, Poles, Russians, and some internal dissension among the Mongols themselves, all of Europe would have been enslaved and racially cleansed (sort of like what is happening now). This then is the insane criminal monster that certain academics (Marxists, essentially) and uninformed teachers are now throwing in the White Man's face as some sort of “misunderstood” hero of history.

A New Jersey newspaper quotes the Jewish (Khazar) developer of a popular museum exhibit dedicated to Genghis Monster. His deceitful apologia for Khan is hard to stomach:

"We grew up thinking of him (Genghis Khan) as a barbarian," said Lessem, a Philadelphia native and dinosaur guru. "But in reality, we were the barbarians." (By "we", Lessem means White people. You know the trick!)

In the new traveling exhibit, "Genghis Khan: Bring the Legend to Life" — at the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia — the true story of this notorious conqueror is told. Fascinated by the genius of Khan, Lessem, the developer of the exhibit, wanted to "set the record straight.

"He brought the East and West together," Lessem said, adding that Khan was indeed a true visionary. 'Khan invented passports, paper money, he believed in freedom of religion and tax breaks for clerics. There are so many things that are a part of our everyday lives. We just don't realize it,' he said."
What a great guy that Genghis was, eh Lessem? That's easy for you to say because Khan and his successors mass-murdered the Aryans of Central Asia, India and Eastern Europe; and the White Christians, Persians and Muslims of the Middle East (and lots of Chinese too). You see, anyone who genocided, raped and enslaved as many Aryans as Killer Khan did is A-1 kosher-certified in Lessem's book!

Lessem's role is central in putting together this ode to White Christian and Muslim genocide.

As an historic figure of great significance, there ought to indeed be a Genghis Khan exhibit. But such an exhibit should graphically depict Khan and his mass-murdering, raping, plundering, torturing, enslaving, culture-wrecking Mongol hordes as genocidal monsters who terrorized our gentle European ancestors -- not as "misunderstood conquerors" who gave us "passports" and "tax breaks for clerics."

Good God! This is all so bloody damn twisted and evil. Excusing the captive students who are being frog-marched through such exhibits, any self-hating White “liberal” who voluntarily shells out money to view this obscenity ought to have just a tiny droplet or two of molten silver poured down his own throat, Mongol style -- just to get a small taste of what some of Khan’s terror-filled victims went through. How's that for being "misunderstood?"

Lessum's nightmare was later featured at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library in California. Get a load of the fawningly deceitful description posted up at the Reagan Foundation website:

"What do pants, the pony express, cannons, paper money, skis, violins, bakhlava and “hooray!” have in common? Answer: Genghis Khan introduced them all to the West.

Not Genghis the brutal barbarian of Western history books, but Genghis the great civilizer and lawmaker, whose empire brought each of these innovations to the west, including 13th Century Mongolian-style democracy.
Now the most comprehensive exhibition of Genghis Khan and his treasures invades the Reagan Library, its only Southern California stop on an international tour that has drawn more than a million visitors."

What a great guy that Genghis was, eh?

1. Don Lessum with members of Denver's "Mongolian community" who helped him celebrate the exhibit. 2. "The Great Civilizer," eh? “Scholars" like Lessum have rehabilitated the monstrous swine who subjugated East and Central Asia and terrorized our European ancestors.

According to Wikipedia’s summary of Genghis Khan, the Carnegie Institution for Science's Department of Global Energy also found an upside to Khan’s killing:

“According to a study by the Carnegie Institution for Science's Department of Global Energy, the destruction under Genghis Khan may have scrubbed as much as 700 million tons of carbon from the atmosphere by allowing forests to regrow on previously populated and cultivated land.”

Deep breath.

These anti-White Leftist Globalists truly are just as sick and demented as Genghis Monster. And just like their new Mongol hero, they too would just love to kill a few billion of us off if they could – and then rule the world with the same iron fist.
